

Youngsters admitted to Ontario Training Schools are provided with a well-rounded program of academic and vocational studies, library services, a wide variety of recreational activities, religious counselling of all denominations, and professional treatment services. All students are encouraged to increase their academic level—remedial and special education programs are provided for this purpose. In sports, track and field and inter-school ball games give our students the chance to make friends with students in community schools. Parents are encouraged to become involved in the programs at each school by visiting as often as possible and discussing with staff the activities in which their child takes part. Staff members are always available to discuss any special problems with parents which will help them to help their child when he returns to the community.

Aftercare services are one of the most important aspects of our program for juveniles. Each child is assigned an aftercare officer, who will visit his home and the community in which he lived to learn as much as possible about the youngster. In this way, once a student has graduated from one of our schools, the aftercare officer has special knowledge of his difficulties and can help him to settle into his home and the community. He can help solve problems which often arise at a new school, help find employment if the youngster is old enough, or simply be available to offer encouragement. The aftercare officer is also available to parents or foster parents for guidance and counselling. Wardship may be terminated by the Training Schools Advisory Board earlier than the normal age of eighteen if the Board feels that this is a satisfactory arrangement for the child.

Correctional institutions for adult offenders in Ontario provide a variety of rehabilitation opportunities. For the younger offenders who show ability and a willingness to learn, there are training centres with full-day academic and trades training programs. For older offenders, there are programs of industry, construction, and institutional maintenance, teaching good work habits which are of value to any employer in the community. The attitudes and behaviour patterns of offenders must be changed to acceptable ones, thus the training program at each institution is complemented by group and individual counselling, spiritual guidance, a full recreational program, library services, medical services, and so on. Through these many activities the inmate is helped to return to the community with a more positive outlook and with a new measure of self-respect.

In the variety of institutions for adult offenders, great use is made of the small, specialized institution. Seven forestry camps provide training, in an open setting, in conservation work, development of park sites, and restoration of historical sites. Five minimum security training centres for younger men concentrate their programs on academic and vocational training. The Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic provides treatment for alcoholism, drug addiction, and pedophilia. Programs for women, both at the Vanier Centre and Ingleside, provide academic, commercial, and vocational training. When those in our institutions return to the community, our aftercare service will help them to find accommodation and employment and will provide funds for such items as clothing, tools, and other necessities to enable them to re-establish themselves in the community.
